Coronado: Coronado, "The Crowned City," is the queen of San Diego's neighborhoods. Not truly an island, but the headland of the peninsular sandpit that guards San Diego's fine natural harbor, Coronado's appeal is as strategic as it is aesthetic. Early in the city's history, the U.S. Navy staked its claim, while entrepreneurial land dealers capitalized on the beautiful beaches and fine weather. Today, Coronado is still true to its roots as a premiere resort destination, prized residential address and patriotic Navy town.

Most visitors' introduction to Coronado is the spectacular bird's-eye view crossing over the Coronado Bridge from downtown San Diego: sailboats racing westward to the Islas Coronados, the dramatic cliffs of Point Loma to the north, the endless beaches stretching southward to the Mexican border, and the red fairytale spires of the Hotel del Coronado dominating the low-rise residential landscape.

The Historic Hotel del Coronado.

Of paramount interest to visitors are Coronado's excellent ocean beaches, bayside parks, and the palatial Hotel del Coronado, which has catered to countless celebrities, heads of state and even, according to legend, a resident ghost.
